Program Description

This symposium is designed for physicians, nurses and other health care professionals responsible for the care of mothers and/or neonates. The faculty will address the management of various clinical situations that arise in the practice of obstetrics and neonatal care. Topics presented will explore areas of rapid change with an emphasis on optimizing the outcome for mother and infant.

Upon completion of this conference, participants should be able to:

- Understand the more successful methods of labor induction
- Differentiate tobacco components from e-cigarette components
- Compare the benefits of delayed cord clamping versus cord milking
- State the value humor has on stress reduction in the workplace
- Describe the action of magnesium sulfate and its relationship to fetal neuroprotection
- Implement practical strategies in the management of the diabetic obstetrical patient
- Review the incidence of seizures in the neonate
